

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

Therapy in Transition Receives Positive Response to Website's New Design

Therapy in Transition (TITO) launched its newly redesigned website in beta testing on Dec. 29, 2009, and the feedback continues to be overwhelmingly positive. Visitors describe the newly designed site as "professional," "informative," "user-friendly" and "inspirational."

Wilsonville, OR – Jan. 5, 2010 Therapy in Transition opened its newly redesigned website for beta testing on Dec. 29, 2009. Individuals can access all areas of the website, including those that will be limited to members only when the site moves from beta to live status in a few weeks.

Visitors can visit the beta site (www.therapyintransition.com) to view and interact with the new design and functionality. Nancy Thompson, owner of Flourish, says "It is truly amazing...it's easy to navigate, beautiful, professional and already chock full of wonderful ideas, information and inspiration."

"We knew we were building a unique, explorative and interactive site," TITO's co-creative director and founder Karen Kleinwort said, "but the overwhelmingly positive feedback is just the confirmation we needed to continue our journey in building this amazing community for our members."

Visitors can access the entire site, including a panel of experts, moderated forums dedicated to answering questions that members submitted by members, and articles written exclusively for TITO members supporting members' personal and professional growth. The beta site also features course enrollments TITO's online learning community, Tito's Learning Center (TLC), offers online.

During the beta testing period, online membership fees are discounted to $100/year, although after beta testing is complete the fees will be $15.99/month or $159.99/year.
