MELBOURNE, FL: Professional Standards Institute today announced the February 14th release of a new certification program for Program Managers.

After two years of research and development, Professional Standards Institute, established in 1997, has released a new certification program series in the area of Program Management. The new certification series offers three levels of certification starting with the entry level certification Associate Program Coordinator. It is recommended that candidates have at least two years experience prior to taking the certification test. The next certification level is the Senior Program Manager. It is an advanced level certification and it is recommended that candidates have five years of experience. The highest level certification is the Master Program Administrator. It is for seasoned professionals who have achieved a broad knowledge and mastery in the Program Management and Administration with a recommendation of at least 10 years of experience.

The certification tests are constructed to measure "Real World" expertise and knowledge. The certification test covers various subjects of program management to include, organization program design and planning, program budgeting and financial management, program management concepts, processes, and metrics, program management tools and techniques, and more.

At the senior and master levels of certification, a candidate can earn one of three specializations. These include information technology, project portfolio management, and lean processes and systems. In addition, a candidate can earn one of two endorsements, to include educator/trainer and consultant.

Obtaining professional certification is extremely beneficial to individuals because it proves to potential and current employers an advanced level of knowledge in a field. Professional Standards Institute's certifications go a step further by ensuring that this knowledge is obtained through experience and education and not bookwork.

Professional Standards Institute is dedicated to the establishment, development, and preservation of high professional standards and ethics. For more information on PSI certifications or professional development or continuing education courses, please visit www.ProfessionalStandardsInstitute.com.
