FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE:

Premier Supply Chain Services Provider Launches New Supply Management Recruiting Podcast Series

Willow Grove, PA (July 24, 2015) - This month, leading procurement services consulting firm Source One Management Services, LLC expands its thought leadership footprint with the launch of a new series in the Source One Podcast Network: "Supply Management Recruiting Insider." Featuring insights from the preeminent supply management staffing firm, MRA Global Sourcing, the recurring series provides a spotlight into trends and developments in staffing and recruiting for the procurement and strategic sourcing industry.

As the trusted spend management advisor for dozens of industry-leading companies, Source One has its "ears on the ground" with decision-makers and executives managing spend across every category. As Source One VP of Operations, William Dorn, notes: "In recent years, the demand for qualified sourcing and procurement professionals has been higher than ever. More and more companies are seeking innovative approaches to cost reduction, and that requires having access to the right talent pool, with core competencies in strategic sourcing and procurement best practices, as well as fostering collaboration across functions and departments."

The recurring series kicks off with MRA Global Sourcing's Managing Partner Naseem Malik, and Search Consultants Nick Lazzara and Kaitlyn Krigbaum. The team discusses the evolution of the supply management profession, how changing expectations impact hiring practices, and how both companies and candidates can best position themselves in their search. Malik predicts that the candidate-driven market will continue to prevail as the demand for top procurement talent reaches new heights. "It's the classic case of demand and supply and currently the market is at all-time high for Procurement talent. This means good candidates have a lot of options and are able to exert their power when it comes to selecting their next employer," Malik explains.
