For many years, the iconic Peter Max, "America's Painter Laureate," has returned to his beloved Stone Harbor, NJ over the Fourth of July holiday, always with new artwork painted specifically for the patriotic summer showing at the New Jersey Shore. This year's exhibition marks the 50th Anniversary of the "Summer of Love" and will include many of Max's vibrant, cosmic images that captured the spirit of the '60s youth movement and were cited by art critics as "the visual counterpart to the music of the Beatles."

It was the summer of 1967 when as many as 100,000 young people converged in San Francisco’s Haight-Ashbury neighborhood and rung in a new era celebrating a simple four-letter word...LOVE. Max explains, "I remember the ‘Summer of Love’ vividly. It was a great cultural revolution, and out of it came the peace movement, ecology, natural foods, yoga, meditation, animal rights, and great rock music from Hendrix, Dylan, The Beatles, The Who, Ravi Shankar, The Mamas and the Papas, and so many others. So much incredible music. The chords, sounds and rhythms of this era influenced the movement of my brushstrokes, and still do."

A pop culture icon, Peter’s transcendent imagery, bold colors, and uplifting themes have touched almost every aspect of American culture and inspired more than five generations. During the “Summer of Love”, Peter remembers, “I was consumed by the idea of innocence as well as transcendence. I drew the faces of my flower children to be sweet and full of wonder...”
